

Hey friend!

Can I still call you that? I hope taking a break didn't ruin our relationship, things are just starting to get good!

Last weekend Skyler and I attended the first vendor fair of the year. Love them or hate them, they can be a useful tool to gain exposure. We're still new to the area so I'm willing to use any avenue I can to make people aware of what Primrose Creations is all about!

I'm excited to keep this momentum going! We'll be participating in another vendor fair on April 6th in Mayfield that I'll link to at the bottom. Even if I don't sell one CSA membership, the time spent talking to people and educating them fills my heart with joy! Don't get me wrong, our CSA memberships are what keeps us going. Every time we sell one, I get excited that I have yet another person or organization to deliver flowers to!

Before our next event, my hope is to have my new project completed and able to be shared with all of you! In the meantime, don't forget to snag our freebie: Culinary Herb Companion Planting Guide. In a few week's we'll be rolling out another guide, this one will be dedicated to vegetable companions.

I'm a sucker for planning and streamlining as many processes as possible. Why dig through a hundred references when you can get the same information from one? If you haven't guessed already, this new project is also a guide of sorts! Keep your eyes on your inbox, you'll be the first to know all about it.

My little disappearing act also meant there were no new posts last week. I'm so sorry! If you can forgive me, I promise you'll enjoy our new post this week: How healthy is too healthy? The facts about veganism. The dangers of a vegan diet are huge! While the lifestyle is not for me, the information in this week's post is important for anyone who is. Let me know what your thoughts are. I'm always down for a good conversation!

#LoveTheLifeYouLive,

Christina
