

I hope you enjoyed the summer and are well on your way to being prepared for winter! Things here at Primrose Creations have been quiet (to you, behind the scenes is another thing!) but we're back! Some exciting changes are in store and I hope you stick around to see what happens!

Over the last several months, I've been daydreaming about what I wanted out of this crazy thing called life. Being self-sufficient is always a goal, writing is a passion, our journey as homeowners has been an adventure... but none of that gave me the adrenaline rush I was looking for when I found my calling.

While preparing for our wedding, I kept being drawn to finding local products and florals and had a desire to invest in local small businesses. Seeing how excited I was to find fresh cut flowers from a local flower farm a week before the wedding made me realize that I love plants! I love growing flowers! I also love teaching others about the benefits of nurturing our environment.

Chris put a bug in my ear and told me that my calling was flowers. He made one statement: figure out where you want your greenhouse before it starts to snow.

That was all the confirmation I needed!

If flowers aren't your thing, I understand! Please feel free to unsubscribe to the newsletter. Not everyone is destined to remain on the same path! If you decide to stay, send me an email or reach out through Facebook or Instagram.

Take some time this week to think about what motivates you and follow that dream! And as always, #lovethelifeyoulive!
